Doing Business in the Global Marketplace

You may have heard that China is a communist country, but what does that mean exactly? The terminology can be confusing. In 1978, China moved away from its socialist roots, where the government (in the form of the Chinese Communist Party) owned the factories and farms, toward a more free-market economy that China itself calls a "socialist market economy." This relatively new version of China allows individuals to own property and to take risks, as Jack Ma did when started Alibaba. You may not have heard of his company, but in 2014, Alibaba accounted for 80 percent of China's online shopping and its sales dwarfed other e-commerce companies like Amazon and eBay.

Ma's story isn't one of overnight success, even though it may seem like it. It took Ma Yun, aka Jack Ma, four years to pass the entrance exams for college in China, but he persevered and received a degree in English. Shortly after that, he worked through graduate school, teaching English, to earn a degree. In the mid-1990s, he took a trip to the United States and experienced

Ma's story isn't one of overnight success, even though it may seem that way in hindsight. It took Ma Yun, aka Jack Ma, four years to pass the stringent entrance exams for college in China, but he persevered and finally received a degree in English. Shortly after that, he worked his way through graduate school, teaching English, to earn a degree in business. Still, he couldn't land a job in the tough Chinese job market. ## Introduction

Suppose you work for a large company and your supervisor asks you to decide if a new version of a smartphone should be produced and sold. You start by thinking about the product's innovations and new features. Then, you stop and realize the consequences of the decision. The product will need to make a profit so the pricing and the costs of production and distribution are all very important. The decision to produce the product is based on many alternatives. So how will you know? Where do you start?

Without experience in the industry, beginning to develop an intelligence that will make you an expert is essential. You select three other people to work with and meet with them. The conversation focuses on what you need to know and what information and data you need. In your meeting, many questions are asked. How many competitors are already in the market? How are smartphones priced? What design features do competitors' products have? What features does the market require? What do customers want in a smartphone? What do customers like about the existing products? The answers will be based on business intelligence consisting of data and information collected through customer surveys, engineering analysis, and market research. In the end, your presentation to support your decision regarding the introduction of a new smartphone is based on the statistics that you use to summarize and organize your data, the statistics that you use to compare the new product to existing products, and the statistics to estimate future sales, costs, and revenues. The statistics will be the focus of the conversation that you will have with your supervisor about this very important decision.
